Nude maids have been a popular home improvement service for a few years, developing as a logical extension from home strippers and visiting dominatrixes. The average alt-weekly has a few agencies advertising the service. There are also plenty of Internet sources like Centerfold Strips, where "French Maid Cleaning Service" is listed with "Hot Oil Wrestling" and "Fetish Catering."

Officially, it's merely a "light cleaning session." This, however, begs the question of why somebody would pay $400 for an hour of "light cleaning." The lovely Bijou -- looking very much like Jaime Pressly -- arrives ready for heavier duty. In contrast to the classic skimpiness of her French Maid's outfit, she carries a sturdy plastic bucket full of rags, lemon Pledge and a feather duster.

Bijou also has a CD of dance music. She looks ready to clean up whatever we wish. Still, our maid starts off insisting that we remain realistic. "Some guys," she politely warns, "think I'll clean their house like a regular maid until it's spotless. I'm really here to fulfill the fantasy of the French Maid."

In that case, she means the French Maid's fantasy of getting paid ten times what most maids make in an hour of hard work. However, Bijou isn't afraid of hard work: "I won't clean bathrooms, but I'll do windows. I've done laundry. I'll sweep, even though a broom is mainly a prop to me. And I'd probably do dishes, if someone really wanted me to."

However, Bijou already knows that washing the dishes would mean her back would be to the client. As her breasts strain against her uniform's lace front, it seems better to keep Bijou moving. She volunteers to show us some impressive cleaning techniques and commences to dust. Bijou reaches up high and strains to dust the top of a bookshelf. Bijou bends over at the waist and strains to dust the bottom of a coffee table. Bijou turns around to look at us and our eyes stop straining.

That's when Bijou deftly undoes the little bow that's tied across her back. The apron opens up, revealing her fine ass and the tops of her fishnet stockings. She uses this freedom to reach up higher to dust away some cobwebs.

She then turns around and doffs the front of the outfit. Any man would agree that this is a good $400 worth of dusting.

"Guys are really just happy that there's a pretty girl coming in," Bijou notes, as she takes a rag and begins polishing the wood stairwell. "The actual cleaning usually takes 20 minutes to a half-hour. That's why I have the energy to do five places a day. There's only so much cleaning that can be done in an hour."

For some, of course, an hour of good cleaning might make a dent in the monstrous dust bunnies that breed beneath the bed. On the other hand, Bijou makes furniture polishing seem like the most important chore in the house. She leans far over the dining room table and looks over her shoulder to be sure that we're admiring her work.

"Some clients can still be very demanding," she explains. "There was one guy who had me answering the door and taking messages. I've had guys following me to be sure that I pick things up when I dust their shelves." (For the record, she does.)

Left to her own devices, Bijou prefers the following schedule: Light cleaning, a proper strip act and then a little lap dancing. This last item is a bit more than we expected. Frankly, there seemed a better chance of having our toilet cleaned.

Bijou concedes that the lap dance isn't for everybody: "We only do lap dances if the customer seems really comfortable. Lap dances are just a good way to make sure that the customer's satisfied. But the maid work is important. I'll end up dancing when I work a bachelor party, but the guys always want to see me do some cleaning first."

That's why Bijou's expenses include an impressive collection of French Maid outfits. "I have the traditional black maid's uniform," she explains, "and a pink one and a black vinyl one. You can usually tell what kind of guy a client is by what uniform they want to see me wearing. Some guys seem to really like the idea of a dumb blonde, and that's the pink uniform. Black vinyl is for a pretty special taste. I've had clients who want me to be some kind of dominatrix. I'm not into that, thank you."

However, Bijou is ready to play along with more specialized clients. "I had a woman client one time," she volunteers. "I'm pretty sure it was a gift for a lesbian. She seemed very embarrassed, but she was laughing and really enjoyed it. That was actually kind of fun. I was supposed to dance for her, but she didn't want me to."

But then there's the biggest question: What does it mean when Bijou gets invited to the, ahem, bedroom, for some, ahem, cleaning duties?

"I'll always make a guy's bed. Then he'll always want to sit on the bed and he'll want me on the bed, too. That kind of thing can make you a little nervous. There's a line you can't cross. But the customer is supposed to watch me clean, and a maid can't stop a client from touching himself."

Women in Bijou's line of work often say that kind of thing. The real world, of course, is different. If a guy tries masturbating in front of the maid at the local Motel 6, he'll find out how fast she can stop him from touching himself. To be fair, Bijou is stressing an important point that keeps her services legal -- and popular.
